Dear FDA,

The risks of the so-called "morning after pill" are numerous, serious and with a long reach into women's subsequent health. Plus, of course, this drug has no medical application whatsoever – it is designed solely to destroy a developing embryo in his or her earliest stages of life. The Food and Drug Administration is supposed to be a scientifically sound, health-oriented watchdog for the American people; it is not supposed to use its "bite" to further the social agenda (let alone the immense profits) of the chemical abortion industry. Please make sure the FDA does not commit itself and thus American women to a disastrous course by allowing this poisonous drug to be sold over the counter.

Sincerely,

Denny Hartford
